Awaken Discovery
Guides for grounding, reflection, and calm

Welcome

If you're reading this, it's likely that anxiety has been present for you in some way.

Anxiety is something many of us experience, yet it can feel incredibly personal and isolating.

While the symptoms or sensations might sound similar when described, how anxiety shows up in your body, thoughts, and emotions is unique to you.

This support sheet isn't about fixing you or getting rid of anxiety completely.

Instead, it's an invitation to gently slow things down and begin listening to what your body and inner world may be trying to communicate.

You don't need to do this perfectly.
You don't need to do everything at once.
Simply being here, taking a moment for yourself, is already enough.

A Moment to Pause

When anxiety rises, the body is often the first place it shows up.

Before trying to change anything, see if you can gently notice.

You might like to try this now:

- Place one hand somewhere on your body that feels comfortable or safe
- Notice the contact between your hand and your body
- Notice the temperature, the weight, the sensation

There is no right or wrong way to feel.

If it feels okay, allow your breath to soften slightly — no need to control it, simply notice it moving in and out.

Sometimes, simply returning attention to the body can help remind us that we are here, in this moment, and supported by the ground beneath us.

Noticing What's Present

Take a few moments to reflect.
You don't need to write a lot — just whatever feels right today.

Right now, my anxiety feels like:

In my body, I notice:

One small thing that helps me feel a little steadier is:

You may notice there isn't much space here.
That's intentional.

Tracking your experiences over time — noticing patterns, changes, and what truly supports you — is something that benefits from having a dedicated place to return to, which is explored more fully in the extended journal.

Something to Return To

When anxiety appears, it can help to return to something simple and familiar.

You might choose:

- Something solid — feeling your feet on the floor
- Something moving — slowly sipping water or noticing gentle movement
- Something breathing — allowing a longer, softer exhale

You don't need to use all of these.
One is enough.

Over time, having a few personal anchors can help you find your way back to yourself more easily, even in the middle of a busy or overwhelming day.

A Gentle Next Step

If this support sheet felt helpful, you may benefit from having a space to explore your anxiety more deeply — noticing patterns, tracking progress, and building a personal toolkit that supports you.

The Anxiety Journal from Awaken Discovery expands on this gentle approach, offering more room to reflect,
regulate, and reconnect with yourself over time.

There is no rush.

You can take this work at your own pace.

Thank you for taking this moment for yourself.

This resource is for general support and self-reflection only and is not a substitute for counselling,
